

Update on changes to food labelling legislation

On 20 July 2016, food labelling legislation changed, affecting the 'No gluten-containing ingredients' (NGCI) term used by some food providers.

In accordance with the latest information from the Food Standards Agency (FSA), food businesses will no longer be able to put the NGCI label against individual products or dishes, both on packaged foods and on menu choices in restaurants. However it will be acceptable to use NGCI to head up a list of products without gluten-containing ingredients, for example as a title on a menu or a list of products on sale in a supermarket. This allows caterers and retailers to indicate the availability of these products to consumers.

There is likely to be a transition period whilst menus signposting individual dishes as NGCI are changed, so you may still see the NGCI on individual products for a short while.

We will keep you and our food contacts updated with developments online, in these newsletters, and in Crossed Grain magazine. For more information visit our Food Industry section on our website.

We ask Birmingham – Is it coeliac disease?

Birmingham turned the summer on for us when we popped up in July. But the hottest day of the year didn't stop us from raising awareness of coeliac disease and how to get diagnosed. Staff and volunteers from the Birmingham Local Group distributed thousands of leaflets and spoke to hundreds of people explaining what coeliac disease is and the most commonly reported symptoms. A huge thank you from Coeliac UK to all of the Members who came to lend a hand, particularly to Sophie and her partner for giving up some of their summer holiday, we're really grateful for the support.

Over the course of the week we provided testing for coeliac disease for 87 people using the Simtomax point of care test, with a positive result for around 12% of those who were tested. All those testing positive were referred to their GP for further investigation. Our final pop up event will be taking place from 15 to 19 August in Newcastle, you'll find us on Northumberland Street, south.

Passionate about food? Become a Food Campaigner!
We know that eating out and accessing gluten-free food is of huge importance to you. Our new Food Campaigner volunteering role has been launched to help improve your experience when food shopping or eating out gluten-free. From providing tips to restaurants on gluten-free catering or taking part in our 'Mystery diner' initiative, to contacting your local retailers about expanding their gluten-free range, this role is flexible to fit around your interests and availability.

Become a Health Campaigner and help us find the half a million undiagnosed

There are half a million people in the UK living with undiagnosed coeliac disease. As you may know from your own diagnosis story, it can take many years from first discussing symptoms with your GP to finally getting a diagnosis. We are looking for Health Campaigners to network, raise awareness and campaign locally. By talking with GPs, pharmacists and dietitians we can find the half a million people in the UK without a diagnosis and ensure proper post diagnosis care, support and management is received by all.

Our catering training travels to Malta

Our online catering training course will now be available to caterers in Malta. We have partnered with Narrative Structures who are going to manage our course on safely catering gluten-free for restaurants, schools and hospitals in Malta. This means that you will be able to dine out with confidence whilst on holiday at places displaying our certificate. Keep an eye out on our website for updates on venues which have completed the course.

Research priorities in coeliac disease

If you were able to choose what research to fund, what would it be?

Do you have unanswered questions about coeliac disease that you believe could be solved by research and would improve the lives of people living with the condition? If so we would like to hear from you.

Our online questionnaire is split into two parts. In part one you can list up to a maximum of five research questions and in part two there are a few questions about you, it would be really helpful to the research if you could answer these too.

Neurological impairment in coeliac disease and non-coeliac gluten sensitivity

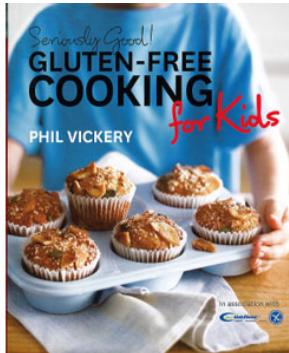

We have spoken with Professor Marios Hadjivassiliou, Professor of Neurology at Sheffield Teaching Hospital and Coeliac UK funded researcher, about his latest publication on neurological impairment in coeliac disease and non-coeliac gluten sensitivity (NCGS). Here he provides his insight.

What neurological symptoms are seen in coeliac disease?

The most common neurological symptoms are loss of balance (lack of coordination, clumsiness, instability when walking, tendency to fall, slurred speech), sensory symptoms (numbness, tingling usually affecting feet and hands) and headaches that do not respond to the usual medication. Loss of balance is seen in gluten ataxia, the sensory symptoms are usually seen in gluten neuropathy and the often intractable headaches (sometimes associated with abnormal magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) of the brain) are due to gluten encephalopathy. Patients may also experience some cognitive (memory and concentration) difficulties.
